Marchers take to streets against China

Tens of thousands of marchers took to the streets in support of the government yesterday, protesting Beijing's military threats and opposing unification with China.

Amid flying green flags, red missile-shaped balloons, and waving "Made in Taiwan" towels, tens of thousands of participants poured onto Taipei's streets to express their abhorrence of China's military posturing and their desire for a peaceful, independent Taiwan.

The "Defending Democracy and Opposing Annexation" parade was launched by the Democratic Progressive Party (DPP), the Taiwan Solidarity Union (TSU) and the Taiwan Democratic Alliance for Peace yesterday.

Marines accused of Iraq massacre

Shortly after a roadside bomb killed a US Marine in a western Iraqi town last year, US forces went into nearby houses and shot dead 15 members of two families, including a three-year-old-girl, residents said.

The story of the incident told on Monday was largely forgotten until last week when the military said it was investigating potential misconduct by Marines after a Nov. 19 insurgent attack in the town of Haditha, 220km north of Baghdad.

The allegations against the Marines were first brought forward by Time magazine, which said it had obtained a videotape two months ago taken by a Haditha journalism student inside the houses and local morgue.

Marines accused of Iraq massacre

A news release accompanying Time's account of events in its Monday edition mirrored what was said by residents who described what happened as "a massacre."

Khaled Ahmed Rsayef, whose brother and six other members of his family were killed in the incident, said the roadside bomb exploded at about 7:15am in al-Subhani neighborhood, heavily damaging a US Humvee.

At the time, a US military statement described it as an ambush on a joint US-Iraqi patrol that left 15 civilians, eight insurgents and a US Marine dead in the bombing and subsequent firefight. The statement said the 15 civilians were killed by the blast, a claim residents denied.

They said the only shooting done after the bomb exploded was by US forces.

News Japan downs Cuba to rule the baseball world

Ichiro Suzuki and his less-famous Japanese countrymen beat Cuba 10-6 in the World Baseball Classic final on Monday, ripping a page out of Cuba's scorebook by winning a major international tournament.

Cuba had won 22 of 24 games in international competition and dominated the globe for decades, but they cracked at the worst possible time against a team which qualified for the semifinals only after the US was upset by Mexico.

In the Classic's inaugural final, Japan led 6-1, Cuba rallied to within one to make it exciting, then Japan ran away for good with four runs at the top of the ninth.

Japan downs Cuba to rule the baseball world-2

News Japan downs Cuba to rule the baseball world

When reliever Akinori Otsuka got the final out, he was mobbed near the mound by his teammates. The Japanese then tossed Sadaharu Oh, their manager, into the air twice.

"I'm unbelievably happy," Ichiro said. "To be honest, I never imagined we'd get there. We had a great team, the best. I hope we showed everyone what a great sport baseball is."

"I never coached a team for a tournament like this, and never thought the pressure to be so high," Oh said. "Baseball is the best sport. Everyone has to work together. There is nothing more wonderful than that the Japanese players did such a wonderful job and showed that to everyone in the world."

Ichiro doubled, singled and drove in a run. He also scored three times, including in a four-run first inning that proved Cuba's pitchers are vulnerable, after all.

Political impasse drags on in Thailand

Thai Prime Minister Thaksin Shinawatra's party and his leading rivals failed to agree yesterday on holding talks between the embattled premier and his opponents, amid rising concern whether snap polls can go ahead.

The three-hour meeting was the first time that representatives of Thaksin's party, the main opposition parties, and the organizers of mass street protests against him have held any sort of negotiations.

Thaksin's Thai Rak Thai party proposed that a neutral mediator moderate talks behind closed doors to end the political crisis but insisted that the premier's rivals accept the results of April 2 snap elections, officials said.

Political impasse drags on in Thailand

"We can't accept the government's condition that we have to accept the result of the coming election," said Suriyasai Katasila, a spokesman for the People's Alliance for Democracy, which has organized the protests aiming to oust Thaksin for alleged corruption and abuse of power.

The three main opposition parties are boycotting the election, and hundreds of candidates from small parties have been disqualified for failing to meet minimum requirements.

The opposition and the protest organizers wanted Thaksin to agree to a televised debate on Friday to settle their differences, but the premier has insisted that all talks take place behind closed doors.

"We think that the debate set for March 24 would not benefit the new election so the government decided not to join the debate," government spokesman Surapong Suebwonglee said.

The meeting came amid rising concerns over the snap polls less than two weeks away.

Domestic violence law to include homosexuals

Homosexuals will now be officially listed and protected under the Domestic Violence Prevention Law (家暴法) after a breakthrough was made yesterday during a review session of draft amendments to the law at the legislature.

Two lawmakers cited the movie Brokeback Mountain in arguing for the change.

The existing law defines "domestic" as "husband and wife relations, spouses and ex-spouses, parents, family members, or blood and non-blood relatives."

Legislators from the Judiciary Committee questioned that definition, asking whether homosexuals were included in those categories and protected by the law.

Domestic violence law to include homosexuals

Minister of the Interior Lee Yi-yang (李逸洋) said that homosexuals were included under the category "family members," although the current law does not explicitly note that.

According to the Civic Law (民法), those who plan to live together over the long term are considered to be "family members," with no strictures against homosexuals.

Taiwan Solidarity Union Legislator Kuo Lin-Yung (郭林勇) said that homosexuals had long been neglected in a society where heterosexual marriages were dominant.

Although gay marriages are not yet legal in the country, more attention should be paid to gay rights, Kuo said.

Domestic violence law to include homosexuals

"They [homosexuals] have been derided, persecuted and constrained in the past, but now they have begun to speak out, allowing their problems to surface and be known," he said. "Therefore, they must now be equally protected by the law."

The amended law should explain clearly that homosexual couples are included under the category of "family members," so that social workers, police and other authorities would understand, Kuo added.

He said gay relationships were often more intense and gay individuals may easily become victims of domestic violence. Without protection from the law, many end up committing suicide because they have no way to seek help, he added.

Democratic Progressive Party (DPP) Legislator Huang Sue-ying (黃淑英) added that the concept of "family" traditionally referred to heterosexual couples and that the decision made at the review session was a breakthrough for gay rights.

Huang said the new amendments should add that members of families could be composed of any sex.

Half of Greenland and vast areas of Antarctica are destined to melt if global warming continues at the same pace until the end of the century, scientists warned on Thursday.

Their research shows that the loss of so much ice will trigger dramatic rises in sea levels, ultimately swamping low-lying islands and coastal regions and threatening the flood defenses of cities such as London.

The last time so much ice was lost from the poles -- in a period between ice ages 129,000 years ago -- global sea levels rose between 4 m and 6 m.

Half of Greenland could melt, new study says

Experts believe many coastal regions would suffer long before sea levels rose significantly, because even a minor rise will make storm surges more devastating and increase the risk of flooding.

The warning comes from climate scientists who combined historical records of Arctic and Antarctic ice melting with advanced computer models capable of predicting future environmental conditions.

They found that if nothing is done to put the brakes on climate change, Greenland, the west Antarctic ice sheet and other expanses of polar ice will be warmed beyond a "tipping point" after which their melting is inevitable.

Jonathan Overpeck, director of the Institute for the Study of Planet Earth at the University of Arizona, and Bette Otto-Bliesner, at the US National Center for Atmospheric Research in Colorado, looked back in history to find a time when sea levels were higher than they are today.

Half of Greenland could melt, new study says

They identified a period when glacial melting increased sea levels by several meters.

They used a computer model of the environment to work out how warm the world must have been to trigger the mass melting and concluded that the Earth was between 3 °C and 5 °C warmer than it is today.

Using the same model, the scientists spun the clock forward to see when climate change is likely to make the world as warm again.

"We showed that that level of warming will come later in this century unless we act on carbon emissions," Overpeck said.

If temperatures do rise as the scientists predict, the ice at the poles will not be lost immediately. Enough ice is likely to melt within the next 100 years to raise sea levels by a meter, but ultimately the fresh water pouring into the North Atlantic would slow down the Gulf stream by a quarter.

The major concern is that unless climate change slows down significantly, the eventual loss of polar ice and subsequent 6 m rise in sea levels will become unavoidable.

Unwelcome guests beginning to bug Hawaii's senator

"We just want to make sure that people are aware of it so that we nip it in the bud, so to speak, before it starts to be a real issue out here," said state Senator Rosalyn Baker who introduced the Senate version on the resolution. Baker, a Democrat who represents popular tourist spots along Maui's west coast, heads the Senate Health Committee.

The campaign would target the islands' hotel and accommodations industry, which lodged 7 million visitors last year.

Not only a sleep-depriving nuisance, bedbugs have become a serious legal problem for the lodging industry. Several lawsuits have been filed against hotels around the US because of alleged attacks by bedbugs, including a US$20 million suit against a resort in New York state's Catskills region filed earlier this month.

Judicial Yuan drafts card debt clearance regulations

The draft would be brought to the legislature for approval in the middle of this month, he said.

According to a statement released at the press conference, card debtors who owe less than NT$10 million (US$307,000) and who are able to immediately return 20 percent of the amount outstanding would be given four to six years to repay their debts. If the debtor fails to pay back the outstanding loans within that period, he or she would be categorized as bankrupt for a seven-year period.

According to the draft, any repayment proposal or bankruptcy order would have to be decided by a court, but card debtors could negotiate with lenders on debt repayment before the plan is reviewed by the court.

Card debtors would need to make a payment for their loans at least once every three months during the repayment period, it said.

Those who are declared bankrupt would be barred from taking 175 kinds of jobs, most of them related to finance, it said.

Air travelers set to suffer as fuel surcharges soar

Ticket prices for international flights will rise after the Civil Aeronautics Administration announced yesterday an increase in fuel surcharges that will take effect on June 21.

Fuel surcharges are additional charges levied on air travelers to help airlines cope with skyrocketing oil prices.

The fuel surcharge will be adjusted to US$17.5 for short-distance international flights and to US$45.5 for long-distance international flights.

Short-distance international flights are defined as flights to other Asian countries, while long-distance international flights are those to other international destinations.

The fuel surcharge was last increased in April, when the administration hiked the rate for short-distance flights to US$15, and for long-distance flights to US$39.

Air travelers set to suffer as fuel surcharges soar

Billy Chang (張國政), director-general of the administration, said that Taiwanese flight operators purchase their fuel from Chinese Petroleum Corp, which announced recently that the average fuel price for this month and last month has reached US$93.52 per barrel, up from an average of US$84.36 per barrel in February and March.

The increase in the fuel surcharge reflects airlines' surging costs, he said.

The additional costs are only partially being passed on to consumers, with the operators absorbing the rest. Airlines shoulder 38 percent to 69 percent of the increased costs of short-distance international flights, and between 73 percent and 84 percent in the case of long-distance flights.

Some of the international airlines have already issued a new policy for fuel surcharges. Starting next Monday, Cathay Pacific Airways will adjust its fuel surcharge to US$14 for short-distance flights and to US$57.8 for long-distance flights.

Many in UK 'don't wear suncream'

Almost a quarter of people in the UK do not wear sunscreen to protect themselves from the sun's rays, a survey suggests.

The Institute of Cancer Research and Superdrug poll of 1,010 people found 67% used high-factor protection while on holiday, but only 33% did in the UK.

Cancer experts warn that, with a hot August set to follow the hottest July on record, people should take care.

They said people wrongly thought in the UK the Sun was too weak to do any harm.

The survey also found that 58% of people did not protect themselves by covering up when in the UK, and 48% do not stay out of the Sun in the middle of the day when it is at its strongest.
Almost four out of 10 people do not put on sunscreen for gardening and nearly half do not put it on for playing sports.

Too much exposure to the UV rays in sunlight can cause skin cancer.

Many in UK 'don't wear suncream' - 2

News Many in UK 'don't wear suncream'

There are about 70,000 new cases of skin cancer diagnosed in the UK each year, many of which could be prevented by avoiding overexposure to UV light.

About 8,000 of these are cases of malignant melanoma - the most deadly form of skin cancer - which is the fastest growing cancer in the UK.

In 38% of cases in men, melanomas develop on the trunk, while in women, 42% of melanomas occur on the legs - both areas of the body which tend to remain hidden until the Sun comes out.
Professor Richard Marais, of the Institute of Cancer Research, said: "The research highlights a common misconception that the Sun in the UK is not dangerous and you do not need to protect yourself."
